PROLOGUE

A Letter For You, Who Have Decided to Change Your Life

Dear soul in search of more:

If this book has come into your hands, it's not by chance. It's an answer. An answer to that whisper inside you that says there's more, that you deserve more, that you're destined for a life of abundance, freedom, and purpose.

For too long, we've been taught a lie: that money is hard to come by, that it's dirty, that it's only for a lucky few. We've been led to believe that wealth is a zero-sum game, where for you to win, someone else must lose. This book exists to demolish those myths.

Here, developed with the transformative essence of The Million Secret, you won't find magic formulas or empty shortcuts. You'll find something far more powerful: the master keys to reprogram your financial reality from its source: your mind, your energy, and your heart.

This journey you're about to embark on isn't just about making money. It's about remembering who you truly are: a creative, powerful being, deserving of all the prosperity the universe has to offer. Through these pages, you'll rediscover money for what it has always been: pure energy, a loyal ally, and a bridge to transforming your highest vision into a tangible reality.

Each chapter is a stepping stone, each exercise an act of empowerment. I invite you to read it not as a mere spectator, but as the protagonist of your own transformation story. Underline, write in the margins, do the exercises with faith. Let these concepts not remain mere ideas, but become the lifeblood that flows through the new body of your financial life.

Your moment is now. Your decision, the first step. This book, your map.

With the certainty that your greatness is about to awaken,

The Million Secret

Chapter 1

Money as energy: the hidden truth

The first thing I want to tell you is this: money is not an end, it's a bridge. It's neither good nor bad, it's neutral. And like all energy, it responds to how you relate to it.

I want you to look at it differently from today onward: when you think about money, you're actually thinking about possibilities. Every bill, every coin, every figure in your bank account is a form of concentrated energy that can expand or disappear, depending on how you use it.

An ancestral perspective

Look, ancient civilizations had a deeper understanding of money than many of us do today.

Egypt: Gold was not just material wealth; it was a symbol of the sun, a sacred metal. The pharaohs used it not for spending, but to represent spiritual power and divine connection.

In China, Feng Shui emphasized harmonizing spaces to allow the energy of abundance to flow freely. A blocked space was like a river with stones obstructing the water's flow.

India: The goddess Lakshmi represented prosperity, beauty, and fortune. She was invoked not with greed, but with gratitude. They understood that abundance is born first in a grateful heart.

And what does this show us? That money has always been understood as a reflection of inner order. It wasn't just about accumulation, but a mirror of how energy flowed in your life.

Money is a mirror of yourself

Let me tell you something straight: money reveals your true identity.

If there is fear, scarcity, and mistrust within you, money will flee.

If you have confidence, creativity, and purpose within you, money will seek your presence.

Money behaves like a friend: if you mistreat it, reject it, or despise it, it will leave. But if you respect it, take care of it, and use it wisely, it will stay and grow with you.

Many people say, "When I have money, I'll be generous." But it's the other way around. First you're generous, and then money comes along and amplifies that.

Real-life example: Cornelius Vanderbilt (U.S. transportation magnate who built railroad and shipping empires)

Cornelius Vanderbilt (the US transportation magnate who built railroad and shipping empires), the son of a Scottish laborer, arrived in the United States poor, with almost nothing. But he had something different: his vision. He saw money as a means to expand industries, help thousands of families, and, at the end of his life, donate a large part of his fortune to universities and libraries.

Carnegie didn't become rich because he "was looking for money," but because he was looking to serve more and better. Money was the natural consequence.

Real-life example: Richard Branson (founder of Virgin, pioneer in music, aviation, and space exploration)

Richard Branson (founder of Virgin, pioneer in music, aviation, and space exploration) never said, “I want to be a millionaire.” His obsession was creating products that would change the way people connected with technology. The money came like an unstoppable wave in the wake of his vision.

Money amplifies your essence

I want you to remember this: money is an amplifier.

A selfish person with money becomes more selfish.

A generous person with money becomes a philanthropist.

A dreamer with money creates new worlds.

So the question isn't: "How do I get money?"

The question is: "Who am I when money finds me?"

The myth of “bad” money

You probably heard it as a child: “Money is the root of all evil.”

Lie.

The original, misinterpreted phrase is: “The love of money is the root of all evil.” And therein lies the difference. The problem isn't money itself, but rather the unhealthy obsession, the aimless greed.

Money, in wise hands, builds hospitals, schools, technology, and art. Money, in the hands of ignorance, destroys. But remember: it's not the money, it's the conscience that uses it.

Metaphors to understand it

Money is like water: it's always in motion. If you keep it in a closed pond, it stagnates. If you let it flow, it nourishes, gives life, and returns to you as rain.

Money is like air: invisible but essential. Sometimes you don't see it, but it's always available. You just need to open your lungs (your mindset) to receive it.

Money is like electricity: neutral, yet powerful. It can light up a city or burn it down, depending on how you use it.

Practical exercise – Reconnecting with the energy of money

Today I want you to do something different:

Sit quietly with a banknote or coin in your hand. Observe it. Feel its texture. Look at its symbols, its history.

Ask yourself: What does it represent for me? Fear, stress, struggle… or freedom, creation, and possibilities?

Write a new personal definition of money in your notebook. Something like:

“Money is energy that allows me to expand my vision.”

“Money is an ally that comes to me because I know how to use it wisely.”

“Money flows to me because I flow with it.”

Every morning, repeat that definition out loud, as if it were a pact between you and life.

Chapter 2

The invisible laws of abundance

There's something I need you to understand right now: abundance is not a coincidence, it's a consequence.

People who attract money don't do so by luck, nor because they were born into "the right family." They do it because, consciously or unconsciously, they apply invisible laws that govern wealth.

Just as gravity makes an apple fall, these laws attract or repel money into your life.

Let's see them.

1. The law of clarity

The universe responds to precision.

If you say, "I want more money," and you find a coin on the street, your wish has already been granted.

Most people live vaguely wishing for abundance: "I hope things go well for me." That doesn't work. The mind needs clear, measurable, and exciting goals.

A real-life example: Napoleon Hill, in his famous book Think and Grow Rich, recounted how a young man decided to become a partner of Alexander Graham Bell (inventor of the telephone, who persevered until he changed global communication). He didn't say, "I want to work with Edison," but rather, "I will become Edison's partner, no matter how long it takes." That clarity led him to persevere until he achieved it.

Exercise: Write a clear and specific financial goal. Not "I want more money," but "I want to earn €2,000 per month in passive income over the next 12 months."

2. The law of focus

What you observe, grows. What you ignore, withers.

Poverty is not a lack of money, it is an excessive focus on scarcity.

Many people spend hours complaining about what they don't have, but never dedicate minutes to imagining and planning how to create what they want.

Sergey Brin and Larry Page (founders of Google, who revolutionized how we access information) didn't focus on the difficulty of competing against giants in the automotive industry; they focused on their vision: a world with affordable electric cars. And their approach turned Tesla into a revolution.

Exercise: Every night, before going to sleep, write down 3 things you are grateful for and 3 things you wish to attract. Do this for 21 days and you will see how your mind is trained to focus on abundance.

3. The law of inspired action

Dreaming without acting is like having seeds in your hand and never planting them.

Money comes when we move energy.

Many people think, “I’ll visualize it and money will fall from the sky.” Wrong. Visualization opens doors, but you have to walk towards them.

Real-life example: Howard Schultz (creator of Starbucks, who transformed coffee culture worldwide) had the idea for Amazon and could have remained just dreaming about it. But he took a bold step: he left his secure job on Wall Street and started in a garage. Inspired action.

Exercise: Every morning, write down one action, no matter how small, that will bring you closer to your financial goal. Do it that same day.

4. The law of giving and receiving

This is a brutal secret: what you give comes back multiplied.

Money doesn't flow to the greedy, it flows to those who generate movement.

Cornelius Vanderbilt (the US transportation magnate who built railroad and shipping empires) donated a large portion of his fortune to libraries. Indra Nooyi (former CEO of PepsiCo, who transformed the company with a vision of inclusive and strategic leadership) has given billions to health and education. And the money never "ran out" for them, because they understood that giving opens the floodgates of receiving.

Giving doesn't mean losing, it means activating the cycle.

Exercise: Give something away every week. It doesn't have to be money; it can be your time, advice, a book, a coffee. Observe how, little by little, life begins to give you back more than you give.

5. The law of belief

This is perhaps the most powerful of all.

You believe → You feel → You act → You receive.

If deep down you believe that you "don't deserve" money, you will lose it even if you have it in your hands.

If you believe that money is dangerous, you will push it away.

But if you believe that money is an ally, your subconscious will look for ways to attract it.

Real-life example: J.K. Rowling (author of Harry Potter, who rose from poverty to worldwide success through her imagination) grew up in extreme poverty, but from childhood firmly believed she was destined for greatness. That belief shaped her destiny and made her one of the most influential and wealthiest women in the world.

Exercise: Write down three negative beliefs about money that you inherited (example: “money corrupts,” “it’s hard to earn,” “only the rich take advantage”). Then, replace them with three empowering affirmations (example: “money amplifies my generosity,” “earning money comes naturally to me,” “wealth allows me to serve more”).

Chapter 3

The millionaire mindset: the battlefield is in your head

Wealth begins in your mind, not in your pocket.

The difference between someone who always lives in scarcity and someone who becomes a magnet for money is not in their external circumstances, but in their internal programming.

Money is a consequence.

The cause is your mindset.

The invisible prison

From childhood we were filled with phrases that became chains:

“Money doesn’t grow on trees.”

“Money is dirty.”

“Only the rich are lucky.”

“If you have a lot, someone else will have nothing.”

Dear reader, these ideas are like mental viruses. They infect your way of thinking and condemn you to always live in scarcity.

Most people are not poor because they want to be, but because they think like poor people, even when they have opportunities right in front of their eyes.

The battlefield

Your mind is the field where the war between scarcity and abundance is fought.

Scarcity whispers: “I can’t, it’s not possible, there isn’t enough.”

Abundance responds: “There is always more, I always find a way, there are always resources.”

The winner depends on who you listen to most.

Real-life example: Alexander Graham Bell (inventor of the telephone, who persevered until he changed global communication). When he failed more than a thousand times trying to create the electric light bulb, his scarcity mindset told him, "You're wasting your time." But his abundance mindset responded, "I didn't fail a thousand times, I discovered a thousand ways that don't work."

That mindset created the light that illuminates your home today.

How the middle class thinks vs. how millionaires think

Middle class: seeks security.

Millionaires: seeking freedom.

Middle class: works for money.

Millionaires: they make money work for them.

Middle class: sees problems.

Millionaires: They see opportunities disguised as problems.

Middle class: spend first and save what's left over.

Millionaires: they invest first and spend what's left over.

This isn't about how much you have in the bank now, but about how you choose to think each day.

Reprogramming your millionaire mindset

This is where your real transformation begins. You need to change the internal files that run in your mind like software.

Identify the limiting belief.

Example: “I’m not good with money.”

Question it.

Ask yourself: Who said that? Is it a universal truth or just an inherited belief?

Replace it.

New belief: “I can learn to manage money like any other skill.”

Repeat and act.

Repetition reprograms, but action confirms it.

Daily Millionaire Mindset Ritual

Do this every morning for 30 days:

Powerful affirmation: In front of the mirror, say it out loud:

“I am a magnet for opportunities and wealth.”

“Money flows to me because I know how to use it wisely.”

“My mind is programmed for abundance.”

5-minute visualization: Close your eyes and imagine yourself already living with the financial freedom you desire. See the details: your house, your travels, your happy family.

Minimal action: Take a single action that moves you closer to your goal. It could be sending a message, studying a finance topic, reading 5 pages of a business book, saving €1. The important thing is that your mind understands you're already moving forward.

The power of the mental environment

It's not just about what you think, but about what you consume and who you surround yourself with.

If you listen to negative news all day, your mind becomes filled with fear.

If you spend time with people who complain, your energy drops.

If you read books about millionaires, your mind expands.

If you surround yourself with visionaries, your vibration rises.

Jim Rohn put it clearly: “You are the average of the five people you spend the most time with.”

Real example: Lionel Messi (from humble origins in Rosario, Argentina, became one of the best footballers in history)

Arnold was born in a small town in Austria, in poverty, with an environment that told him: "Be realistic, work in the factory and survive."

But in his mind there was another plan: “I will be a bodybuilding champion, a movie star, and the governor of California.”

Absurd? Yes. Impossible? No. His mindset led him to break all barriers and create a legendary life.

Practical exercise – Your new identity

Write down how you think about money now. Be brutally honest.

Example: “It’s hard for me to earn it, I’m always short, I don’t have enough.”

Write how your "millionaire self" thinks.

Example: “Money is a tool, I know how to generate it, there’s always more.”

Make a commitment: every time a thought of scarcity appears, immediately replace it with the millionaire version.

Do it for 21 days and you will see how your language, your decisions, and your attitude change.

Chapter 4

The magic of inspired action

Dear reader, listen: dreaming is beautiful, visualizing is powerful, but nothing changes until you take action.

The universe responds to action.

You can read a thousand books, repeat affirmations, meditate... but if you don't make decisions and take action, it all remains just talk. Abundance is like a door: visualization shows you where it is, but action is the key that opens it.

The trap of the passive dreamer

Many people fall into a dangerous trap: they confuse imagining with doing.

They see themselves as rich in their minds, they feel the excitement... but they never take a step.

Result: frustration.

We didn't come into this world just to dream, we came to create realities.

The secret lies in inspired action, that which is born not from fear or obligation, but from vision and confidence.

The difference between forced action and inspired action

Forced action: It comes from anxiety. You do things just for the sake of doing them, running aimlessly, burning yourself out along the way.

Inspired action: born from clarity and purpose. It's that movement that, although it scares you, you feel is the right step.

A real-life example: Howard Schultz (creator of Starbucks, who transformed coffee culture worldwide). He had a secure job on Wall Street, but felt an inner calling: “The internet is going to revolutionize the world, and I want to be there from the beginning.” That vision led him to create Amazon in a garage. It was inspired action.

The principle of cause and effect

All the wealth you see today is a result of your actions.

The money in your pocket, the house you live in, the job you have, everything is a consequence of past causes: thoughts, decisions, actions.

If you want to change your effects, change your causes.

It's simple:

You think → you feel → you act → you receive.

If you change the first step, the last one inevitably changes.

Inspired action stories

Sergey Brin and Larry Page (founders of Google, who revolutionized how we access information): he could have rested on his laurels after PayPal, but his vision drove him to create Tesla and SpaceX. He didn't know how, he just knew he had to. Today he is one of the most influential men on the planet.

Sara Blakely: a fax machine saleswoman with no experience in fashion, she invented Spanx (shapewear). She had no money, no connections, but she had inspired action. Today she's a multimillionaire.

Colonel Sanders: Over 60 years old and bankrupt, he went door to door with his fried chicken recipe. He was told "no" more than a thousand times. But he persisted. KFC was born from that persistent effort.

How to recognize inspired action

You feel scared, but also excited. Your heart beats faster; you know it's not safe, but it feels right.

You don't have all the answers, but you've taken the first step. And you take it.

Even if you fail, you learn. Every attempt becomes a stepping stone.

Daily action ritual

To avoid getting stuck in the world of ideas, perform this ritual:

Write down your main goal. Example: “I want to generate €2,000 in extra income in the next 6 months.”

Break it down into micro-steps. What are the smallest actions you can take today? Call someone, create an online profile, research an investment, write a proposal.

Take one action a day. Just one. Small, but real. Consistency beats perfectionism.

Evaluate each week. Ask yourself: Am I closer than I was 7 days ago?

Practical exercise – Your list of inspired actions

Write down 10 actions you could take in the next 30 days to get closer to your financial goal.

Mark the ones that give you the most fear + excitement.

Start with those: that's where your real growth lies.

Chapter 5

The power of creative imagination

Listen to this with an open heart: everything that exists in the world was first an image in someone's mind.

Before there was an airplane, someone imagined flying.

Before there was electric light, someone imagined illuminating the night.

Before your phone existed, someone imagined connecting the entire planet.

Creative imagination is the secret workshop of wealth. It is where ideas are formed that later transform into money, businesses, and historical changes.

Tesla: the master of the visual mind

Nikola Tesla had an extraordinary gift: he could build entire machines in his mind. He saw every gear, every movement, every spark, without needing to draw anything.

He used to say, “First I believe it in my mind, then I make it a reality.”

His ability to visualize was so powerful that it gave rise to inventions that we still use today, such as alternating current.

Tesla understood that the mind is an infinite laboratory, and that money always follows ideas.

Walt Disney: From Poverty to Magical Empire

Walt Disney was fired from a newspaper because he "lacked creativity." Imagine the irony. He lived in poverty, without resources, but his imagination knew no bounds.

In his mind, Disneyland existed long before he could afford the first brick. He saw the castles, the characters, the parades… And that vision attracted investors, employees, and millions of people who believed in his dream.

Disney not only imagined, he dared to bring to life what others could not see.

Athletes and Visualization

It's not just inventors who use this power.

Olympic athletes practice visualization every day.

They see in their minds how they run, how they jump, how they receive the medal.

Their muscles respond as if they had actually done it.

Science has proven that the brain does not distinguish between a real experience and one imagined with emotional intensity.

This means that if you visualize yourself already living in abundance, your subconscious will begin to look for ways to make it real.

Creative imagination and money

Money never comes first.

First comes the idea.

First comes the vision.

First comes imagination.

The very wealthy don't focus on asking, "How do I make money fast?"

They ask, "What can I create that will bring massive value to the world?"

Money, then, is the inevitable consequence of that creative imagination put into action.

How to activate your creative imagination

Daily silence. Imagination doesn't flourish amidst constant noise. Dedicate at least 10 minutes a day to being silent with your thoughts.

Powerful questions. Ask yourself:

What am I so passionate about that I would do it for free?

What problem could it solve for millions of people?

What would my life look like if I already had the wealth I desire?

Detailed visualization. It's not enough to just think "I want to be rich." You have to see the details: What's your house like? What does your office smell like? Who do you share that special dinner with?

Intense emotion. Emotion is the fuel. The more you feel you're already experiencing it, the faster your mind will find ways to achieve it.

Real-life example: Will Smith (actor and producer, used visualization and discipline to achieve success in music and film) and the check

Actor Will Smith (actor and producer, who used visualization and discipline to achieve success in music and film), when he was still poor, wrote himself a fake check for $10 million dated “1995”. He kept it in his wallet and looked at it constantly, imagining that one day it would be real.

In 1995, exactly as he had envisioned, he received a $10 million contract for the film Dumb and Dumber.

That's creative imagination in action.

Practical exercise – Your mental movie of wealth

Tonight, before you go to sleep, close your eyes and create a movie in your mind.

You are the protagonist.

Imagine your ideal life in detail: where you live, what you do when you wake up, what projects you lead, who you help.

Repeat that visualization every night for 21 days.

Write down in a notebook every sign, idea, or intuition that appears during those days. You will be opening the door to your creative imagination.

Chapter 6

The circle of influence and invisible connections

Dear reader, listen carefully: the people you spend the most time with shape your destiny more than you imagine.

Your circle of influence is like a magnet: it can lift you up to abundance or sink you into mediocrity.

Napoleon Hill, in Think and Grow Rich, called it a "Mastermind": the union of minds with the same purpose generates an invisible force that surpasses any individual effort. And he was right: no one builds a fortune in isolation.

Your surroundings, your mirror

Look around you.

Who do you talk to on a daily basis?

What topics do they talk about?

Are they complaints, criticisms, excuses… or are they plans, dreams, solutions?

Science says we are the average of the five people we interact with most. If your friends are in debt, resigned, and think that "money is bad," sooner or later you'll absorb that energy.

That's why it's vital: consciously choose who you let into your mind and heart.

Visionaries always surrounded themselves with good people

Henry Ford met weekly with Alexander Graham Bell (inventor of the telephone, who persisted until he changed global communication), Harvey Firestone, and other innovators. Together they shared ideas that revolutionized entire industries.

Benjamin Franklin created a club called "Together" where they met to debate, learn, and create projects that would impact society.

Sergey Brin and Larry Page (founders of Google, revolutionized the way we access information) attract brilliant minds who challenge him, question him, and encourage him to think big.

No one becomes a giant surrounded by mental dwarfs.

The invisible connections

The circle is not just physical. We live in an interconnected world.

The books you read are invisible connections to great masters.

The audios, videos, or podcasts you consume are like private conversations with millionaires and leaders.

Even people you don't know in person can become your silent mentors.

The secret lies in tuning your mind to vibrations of abundance. This opens doors, attracts opportunities, and connects you with people who seem to arrive "by chance"... but nothing is by chance.

How to clean up your circle of influence

Take stock. Write down the names of the 10 people you talk to most often.

Rate their energy. Put a “+” if they energize you, a “-” if they drain you, an “=” if they are neutral.

Make a conscious decision. It doesn't mean cutting all ties, but rather investing more time with those who uplift you and protecting your energy from those who bring it down.

How to create your new circle

Virtual mentors. Listen daily to people who talk about abundance, mindset, investments, and growth.

Growth communities. Join groups of people who share your goals, even if it's online.

Collaborations. Seek out people who complement your talents. Remember: wealth flows faster as a team.

Real-life examples: Indra Nooyi (former CEO of PepsiCo, transformed the company with a vision of inclusive and strategic leadership) and Amancio Ortega (founder of Inditex/Zara, revolutionized accessible fashion globally)

When Indra Nooyi (former CEO of PepsiCo, who transformed the company with a vision of inclusive and strategic leadership) met Amancio Ortega (founder of Inditex/Zara, who revolutionized accessible fashion globally), she discovered something powerful: they both valued focus and a long-term vision. This friendship not only strengthened their wealth, but together they created one of the largest philanthropic foundations on the planet.

They understood that surrounding themselves with like-minded people multiplies energy and creates a global impact.

Practical exercise – The abundance filter

Today, do this:

Make a list of all the people, pages, groups, and channels you spend time with.

Ask yourself: Does this influence bring me closer to abundance or further away from it?

Do a 7-day "detox": eliminate all negative influences and surround yourself only with sources that inspire and uplift you.

When you finish, you'll feel like your mind has released tons of dead weight.

Chapter 7

The emotional relationship with money

Dear one, I want you to see this clearly: your bank account is a direct reflection of your emotional world.

It's not just a matter of working hard or knowing how to invest. If you harbor fear, guilt, or aversion to money, sooner or later you will push it away.

Money is like a partner: if you criticize it, despise it, or reject it, it leaves. But if you value it, take care of it, and receive it with love, it stays and grows with you.

The emotional legacy of money

Many of our blocks come from phrases we heard as children:

“Money doesn’t grow on trees.”

“The rich are bad.”

“Better an honest poor person than a corrupt rich person.”

Does this sound familiar? These phrases are like invisible tattoos on the mind. They grow with us and sabotage our attempts to thrive.

The reality is different: money doesn't corrupt, it only amplifies what you already are. If you are honest and generous, with money you will be even more so.

The hidden fear of abundance

Did you know that many people are not afraid of poverty, but of wealth?

They are terrified of standing out, being criticized, losing friendships, or facing greater responsibilities. So, unconsciously, they sabotage themselves.

Example: Someone receives a raise and, instead of saving or investing, spends it all quickly to "get back to their comfort zone."

That's fear disguised as financial habits.

Guilt and deserving

Another powerful block is guilt. People who feel they don't deserve wealth because:

“My family was always poor.”

“There are people suffering, how can I have so much?”

“If I gain too much, I will lose my essence.”

Listen: abundance is not a prize, it is a right.

The universe is infinite. Just because you have more doesn't mean someone else has less. On the contrary: your prosperity can multiply the prosperity of others.

Stories that reveal the truth

J.K. Rowling (author of Harry Potter, who rose from poverty to worldwide success through her imagination), born into poverty and abused as a child, grew up with the idea: “I don’t deserve anything.” But one day she understood that she did deserve love, success, and wealth. By healing her inner relationship with money, she went from victim to billionaire philanthropist.

Howard Schultz, the creator of Starbucks, was the son of a poor truck driver. He felt that wealth was "for others." When he changed his mindset, he saw that he could offer a unique and worthwhile experience to millions of people. Money followed him like a magnet.

Practical exercise – Healing your relationship with money

Write your money story.

Write down everything you heard about money during your childhood. Be honest.

Identify toxic phrases.

Circle all the phrases that reflect fear, guilt, or rejection.

Rewrite your truth.

Replace each sentence with a positive affirmation:

“Money doesn’t grow on trees.” → “Money flows to me in infinite ways.”

“The rich are bad.” → “Wealth amplifies my kindness and generosity.”

Perform a reconciliation ritual.

Take a banknote in your hand, look at it with gratitude, and say aloud:

“I accept abundance as part of my life. Money is my ally, not my enemy.”

Do it for 21 days and you'll see how your vibration changes.

Remember:

Money is not your enemy. It is a mirror of your inner world.

If you heal your emotions, you heal your relationship with abundance.

The day you stop feeling guilty about receiving, you will open the door to a flow that will never stop.

Chapter 8

Creative visualization: seeing wealth before you have it

Nothing great was first created in the physical world. Everything was born in the mind of someone who visualized it before having it in their hands.

Wealth, like a work of art, is first imagined. Then, with faith, action, and perseverance, it materializes.

The mind as a factory of realities

Your brain doesn't distinguish between what you imagine and what you experience. If you close your eyes and clearly visualize your success, your nervous system perceives it as real. And then, your body, your decisions, and your energy begin to align with that vision.

The greatest ones knew that:

Will Smith (actor and producer, who used visualization and discipline to achieve success in music and film), when he was an unknown actor, wrote himself a fake $10 million check for “acting services rendered.” He kept it in his wallet and looked at it every day. Five years later, he received exactly a $10 million contract for “Dumb and Dumber.”

Lionel Messi (from humble beginnings in Rosario, Argentina, who became one of the greatest footballers in history) saw himself as a movie star long before he had any acting roles. He envisioned applause, premieres, and fame. That vision sustained him when no one believed in him.

Conor McGregor, the MMA fighter, used to say, "I see myself driving luxury cars, receiving belts, living in mansions." And little by little, that vision became his reality.

The technique of mental cinema

Here's a brutal exercise used by Olympic athletes and millionaire entrepreneurs:

Choose a financial goal. It could be earning X amount, starting your own business, buying your dream home, or living a life of travel.

Close your eyes. Take a deep breath and relax.

Picture a movie in your mind. Imagine yourself as if you've already achieved it. Look at the details:

Where are you?

What clothes are you wearing?

Who do you share your success with?

What emotions are you feeling?

Make it vivid. Don't just see it: smell it, hear it, taste it.

Repeat this daily. Your mind will begin to believe that this is your new reality.

The Vision Board

Another secret used by thousands of entrepreneurs is to create a physical board with images of what you want:

Houses, trips, projects, money figures, inspirational phrases.

Place it somewhere visible. Every time you look at it, you'll feel like you're already on your way to that life.

This isn't cheap magic. It's neurological programming. By seeing these images every day, your mind begins to seek opportunities and act in accordance with them.

The power of emotion

Visualizing is not just "seeing". It's feeling.

Money doesn't respond to cold images, it responds to the emotional vibration you project.

If you imagine yourself with abundance but think "this is impossible", you are sending a contradictory signal to the universe.

But if you see yourself as rich, grateful, happy, and fulfilled, that emotion acts like an irresistible magnet.

Practical exercise – 21 days of creative visualization

Every morning, before looking at your phone, take 5 minutes to visualize your abundant life.

Imagine a full day as a millionaire: from the moment you wake up until you go to bed.

Feel gratitude as if you already had it.

Write 3 power phrases in your notebook:

“I am aligned with the energy of abundance.”

“Every day I get closer to my vision.”

“Money is flowing to me in increasing amounts.”

Do this for 21 days in a row and you'll notice how your mind begins to open up to new ideas and opportunities.

Remember:

The universe responds to your inner movie. If you can see it clearly and feel it intensely, you can attract it into your life.

The rich understood: they don't wait to see to believe, they believe first and then they see.

Chapter 9

Aligned actions: transforming vision into reality

My dear, dreaming is powerful, visualizing is essential… but if you don't take action, it all remains just smoke.

The universe responds to movement. The energy of money is activated when you take clear and consistent steps toward your vision.

Dreaming is not enough

Many people get caught in the motivation trap: they read books, watch videos, make affirmations… but they never take the leap. And guess what: money rewards those who act, not those who wait for the perfect sign.

The great visionaries knew this:

Alexander Graham Bell (inventor of the telephone, who persisted until he changed global communication) didn't invent the light bulb on his first try. He failed more than 1,000 times, but each attempt was a step closer to his vision.

Howard Schultz (creator of Starbucks, transformed coffee culture worldwide) started Amazon in a garage, selling only books, but every action was aligned with his dream of "creating the world's largest store".

Sergey Brin and Larry Page (founders of Google, revolutionized the way we access information) did not stop at the idea of reusable rockets, they tried until SpaceX succeeded after multiple failures.

They didn't expect perfection. They acted, adjusted, learned, and kept going.

Aligned actions vs. scattered actions

There are two types of shares:

Scattered actions: These are actions you take without direction, trying everything without clarity. They exhaust you and don't produce significant results.

Aligned actions: These are actions directly connected to your vision. Every step, no matter how small, brings you closer to your goal.

The key is not to do more, but to do the right thing consistently.

The map of the million-dollar stock

Here's a powerful method for aligning your actions:

Define your vision. Write it clearly: “I want to generate X monthly income with my project.”

Break it down into concrete goals. For example: create a digital product, launch a campaign, generate 100 initial customers.

Break it down into micro-actions. Each big goal is divided into daily steps. If you want to sell an ebook, the micro-steps could be:

Write the index.

Write the first chapter.

Design the cover.

Create the sales page.

Do it every day. It doesn't matter if it's 15 minutes or 5 hours: consistency beats fleeting intensity.

Evaluate and adjust. Ask yourself each week: Does this bring me closer to my vision or distract me?

The 80/20 principle

80% of your results come from 20% of your actions.

20% of your customers generate the majority of your revenue.

20% of your habits determine your financial destiny.

20% of your strategic efforts attract key opportunities.

Identify that 20% and focus on it.

Practical exercise – The 30-day action plan

Write down your most important financial goal.

Write down 5 key actions that will bring you directly closer to him.

Commit to doing at least one of those actions every day for 30 days.

Keep track: put a ✓ every day you complete it.

At the end of the 30 days, review the results and adjust your plan.

The magic of coherence

What you think, what you say, and what you do must be aligned.

If you think about abundance but act out of fear, money will slip away.

If you talk about wealth but do nothing, the universe doesn't respond.

If you act decisively, even if you fail at first, the energy will open up in your favor.

Remember:

The universe loves the brave. Action is the proof of your faith. Every step you take toward your vision sends a clear message:

“I am ready to receive.”

And that's when the doors open.

Chapter 10

Gratitude as a magnet for prosperity

Gratitude is the highest frequency that exists to attract money and abundance.

The problem is that most people believe they should only be grateful once they "already have" what they want. But the great sages knew that the key is to be grateful before, during, and after.

The secret of the vibration of gratitude

Every thought you have is like a signal you send out into the universe. If you think about scarcity, you send out a signal of lack. If you think about gratitude, you send out a signal of abundance.

The universe doesn't distinguish between what's real and what's imagined: it responds to the vibration you emit. That's why, when you give thanks even before receiving, you're confirming your faith that you will receive.

Gratitude = Absolute trust.

The great ones practiced it

JK Rowling (author of Harry Potter, went from poverty to worldwide success with her imagination) attributes her success to a daily habit: writing in her diary at least 5 things she is grateful for each day.

Tony Robbins starts his mornings with a breathing and gratitude ritual to enter a state of abundance.

Wallace D. Wattles, author of The Science of Getting Rich, claimed that gratitude was the most powerful force for connecting with the universal mind of wealth.

Do you see the pattern? None of them started giving thanks when they were already millionaires. They started giving thanks when they had almost nothing. And that energy opened the flow.

Gratitude and money

Money loves to be thanked.

If you despise small incomes, the universe will no longer trust you.

If you value every euro, every customer, every opportunity, you create an open channel for more to arrive.

Example: Imagine you give someone a gift, and they throw it on the ground without saying a word. Would you give them another one? Now imagine they smile, get emotional, and say, "Thank you, this means a lot to me." What would you do? You'd probably want to give them more.

The same applies to money.

Quantum gratitude exercise

Do this every night before going to sleep:

Close your eyes and review your day.

Write down 3 things you are grateful for today (even if they are simple: a meal, a smile, a breath of fresh air).

Write down three things you want to attract and give thanks as if you already have them. Example: "Thank you for the €10,000 that came into my account this month."

Feel the thrill of receiving it. Don't just imagine it with your mind, feel it in your heart.

Gratitude in action

It is not enough to feel gratitude, you have to express it.

Thank the cashier who serves you at the supermarket.

Thank the customer who trusts you.

He is even grateful for the challenges, because they are lessons disguised as problems.

Gratitude turns every moment into a magnet for prosperity.

Chapter End

I want you to always remember this:

Gratitude makes little enough.

Gratitude transforms enough into abundance.

Gratitude transforms abundance into infinite prosperity.

And when you live in gratitude, money has no choice but to seek you out.

Chapter 11

The power of giving: what you give comes back multiplied

Money is a circle, not a straight line. What you give comes back, always.

Most people mistakenly believe that giving means losing. But the great millionaires and sages of history knew a secret: giving is the seed that multiplies abundance.

The universal law of giving

Look at nature:

An apple seed that falls on the ground doesn't produce a fruit, it produces a tree full of thousands of apples.

Flowing water is purified; stagnant water rots.

Breathing is about giving and receiving: you exhale in order to inhale.

Money works the same way. If you only hold onto it and accumulate it, you create fear and stagnation. If you share, if you invest, if you give wisely, money multiplies and returns to you.

The great ones understood it

Cornelius Vanderbilt (the US transportation magnate who built railroad and shipping empires) donated more than 90% of his fortune to libraries, universities, and charitable organizations. As a result, his legacy lives on more than a century later.

Indra Nooyi (former CEO of PepsiCo, who transformed the company with a vision of inclusive and strategic leadership) and Amancio Ortega (founder of Inditex/Zara, who revolutionized accessible fashion globally) created "The Giving Pledge," a commitment to donate the majority of their wealth during their lifetimes. And yet, their wealth continued to grow.

In ancient spiritual traditions, tithing (giving 10% of what one receives) was seen as a way to open the channel of blessings.

Do you see the pattern? The wealthiest people aren't afraid to give. On the contrary, they use it as a strategy to create cash flow.

Intelligent giving

Giving doesn't mean giving everything away without a second thought. It means putting your money, your time, and your energy into things that expand life.

You can provide knowledge.

You can give opportunities.

You can donate money to a cause you believe in.

You can provide value to your customers with exceptional service.

Every time you give, you are saying to the universe, "I trust there is more where this came from."

Practical exercise – The wheel of giving

Do this this week:

Choose an amount of money that you can give without fear (even if it is small).

Give consciously to someone or something that adds value.

Write in your notebook how you feel after giving.

Watch in the coming days as money and opportunities begin to return from unexpected places.

This exercise reprograms your mind from scarcity to abundance.

Giving as a wealth strategy

Great visionaries don't see giving as "charity," they see it as a spiritual investment. They know that what they give creates invisible networks of trust, gratitude, and expansion that sooner or later return multiplied.

Imagine your life as a river: if you give, the water flows and is renewed. If you withhold, the water stagnates and is lost.

Towards your Master Plan

We're building something big. You've learned that:

Money is energy.

There are invisible laws that govern abundance.

Your mind, your beliefs, and your vibration determine your wealth.

Gratitude opens the channel.

Giving multiplies what you receive.

Now comes the crucial moment: creating your Master Plan, your personal pact with wealth.

In that plan you will write how you want to attract, use and multiply money in your life, and you will seal a promise with yourself and with the universe.

That will be your map, your compass, your sacred commitment.

Chapter 12

Master Plan: Your Pact with Wealth

Dear reader, we have reached the most important moment of this entire journey. Up to this point, we have talked, reflected, learned from the greats, and practiced exercises. But now is the moment when all of that becomes a real commitment to yourself.

Money doesn't come by chance; it comes when you have a clear mind, a determined heart, and a plan in action. This chapter is your altar, your sacred space where you will write your personal pact with wealth.

What is the Master Plan?

The Master Plan is a roadmap. It's your money attraction map, written with your own energy. It's not a vague wish, not a "I wish." It's a declaration of intent and a plan that combines:

Vision: how you want your financial life to be.

Action: What steps are you going to take to build it?

Vibration: what mental and emotional state you will maintain.

The greats did it:

Napoleon Hill spoke of the “definite statement of purpose”.

Tony Robbins teaches that clarity is power.

JK Rowling (author of Harry Potter, went from poverty to worldwide success with her imagination) states that prosperity came into her life when she committed to a vision bigger than herself.

This is your moment to join that chain of visionaries.

The 5 steps to design your Money Attraction Map

Declare your financial vision

Write in the present tense how you want to live in 1, 3, and 5 years. Example:

“I live with financial freedom, I generate passive income that exceeds my expenses, and I use my wealth to grow and help others.”

Define your sources of wealth

Write down how you're going to attract money: online business, investments, services, talents, digital products… Be specific.

Establish your daily habits of abundance.

Reading statements.

Visualizing goals.

Gratitude every morning.

Conscious saving and investment.

Design your system of giving and receiving

Decide on a percentage you will reinvest in yourself and a percentage you will give away (even if it's minimal). This step keeps the flow of wealth open.

Define your personal promise

Here you seal your pact. It's a short, clear, and powerful phrase that reaffirms your commitment to wealth and abundance.

Practical exercise: Write your Master Plan

Open your notebook or print this page and complete it:

My financial vision: ___________________________

My sources of wealth: _________________________

My daily abundance habits: _______________

My system of giving and receiving: _____________________

My personal promise: ___________________________

Your Personal Promise

This is the closing, the seed you will plant today:

“I, [your name], choose from this day forward to live in abundance. I commit to cultivating a millionaire mindset, to acting with discipline, to giving generously, and to receiving with gratitude. I declare that money flows to me in increasing amounts from multiple sources, and that I use that wealth to create, grow, and serve. So I write it, so I live it, so it shall be.”

Sign it below. Read it every morning. Feel it. Make it a part of you.

Chapter 13

How to maintain your wealth vibration when life tests you

The real test is not in dreaming, but in keeping the dream alive when everything seems to be against it.

There will be days when the money doesn't come in. Days when debt knocks on your door, or when family and friends tell you, "That's not working." Those are the moments when many give up... and that's precisely when you need to remember who you are and what you've decided to become.

Money, like all energy, responds to your vibration. If you lower your frequency to fear, scarcity, and doubt, you block the flow. But if you learn to maintain your vibration of abundance, even in the midst of the storm, money will continue to seek you out.

The 4 most common tests on the road to wealth

The proof of the delay

Not everything comes immediately. Time is part of the training. This is where your faith is tested.

The test of criticism

When others don't understand your vision, they'll try to drag you down to their level. But remember: those who have never built wealth can't teach you how.

The test of fear

That moment when you must invest, take a risk, or leave your comfort zone. Fear appears to test whether you trust your Master Plan.

The proof of loss

Sometimes you'll lose money, clients, or projects. But every loss is a teacher that prepares you to handle bigger amounts.

Strategies to maintain your high vibration

The mantra of daily abundance

Every morning he repeats aloud:

“I am abundance, I am wealth, money flows to me with ease and joy.”

Gratitude rituals

Write down three things you are grateful for each night. Gratitude is the most powerful magnet for prosperity.

Visual reprogramming

Create a vision board with images of your desired life: home, travel, freedom, projects. Look at it every day as if it were already real.

Protect your environment

Surround yourself with people who talk about growth, abundance, and possibilities. Avoid those who sow fear and doubt.

The "as if" technique

Act and decide as if you were already rich. Ask yourself, "What would my millionaire self do in this situation?" And do it.

Practical exercise: Your wealth shield

Write in your notebook:

What is the challenge that most confronts me today?

____

How can I respond from a place of abundance, not fear?

My immediate action to raise my vibration is:

____

Read it whenever you feel that life is testing you.

Remember this…

Success does not belong to those who never fall, but to those who never stop getting back up.

Wealth does not belong to those who never doubt, but to those who choose to believe even when all seems lost.

You already have your Master Plan; you've already written your pact with abundance. Now all that's left is for you to maintain your vibration, because when you sustain your frequency of wealth… the universe has no choice but to deliver what you asked for.

Chapter 14

Million-dollar stocks: how to turn your energy into real money

Dear soul, you already have the mindset, you already have the pact, you already know how to protect your vibration. But the truth is this: wealth is not built with thoughts alone, but with concrete actions.

Money loves speed, it loves movement. It is attracted to those who think, feel, and act decisively.

This chapter is the manual for those million-dollar actions that transform energy into visible results.

The 5 Laws of Millionaire Stock Trading

Speed Law

An idea is worthless if you don't execute it. Millionaires don't wait for everything to be perfect: they act, test, correct, and act again.

Law of Value

Money always flows toward value. Ask yourself every day, "How can I create more value for more people?" Those who solve problems become wealthy.

Smart Investment Law

Don't keep your money under the mattress. Make it work for you: in knowledge, in business, in assets. Saving without investment is just fear.

Law of leverage

Use systems, tools, and people to multiply your results. Nobody becomes a millionaire working only with their hands; it's achieved by leveraging resources.

Law of constancy

What you do every day is more important than what you do once a year. Wealth is the sum of small actions repeated with discipline.

Examples of Million Dollar Stocks

Sergey Brin and Larry Page (founders of Google, revolutionized the way we access information) sold their first software as teenagers.

Howard Schultz (creator of Starbucks, transformed coffee culture worldwide) started selling books online from his garage.

Sara Blakely (creator of Spanx) knocked on hundreds of doors before becoming the youngest female billionaire with her own brand.

They had ideas, yes. But what made them millionaires was that they took action relentlessly.

Actions you can start today

Create a digital income stream: ebook, online course, Amazon product, freelance service.

Invest in yourself: buy a finance book, attend a course, surround yourself with mentors.

Monetize your talent: What skills do you have that others need? Put a price on it and offer it.

Build your personal brand: open social media accounts and share value on a topic you are an expert in.

Save to invest: allocate at least 10% of your income to an investment fund or business.

Practical exercise: Your 3 million-dollar stocks

In your notebook write:

My first million-dollar stock in the next 24 hours is: _______________

My second action next week is: ___________________________

My third action in the next month is: ______________________________

Set dates. Commit. Remember: what isn't scheduled, doesn't exist.

The final key

The universe responds to action.

Vibration attracts, but concrete action is what opens the doors.

Your mission now is simple: do, do, and keep doing.

Every action, no matter how small it may seem, brings you closer to your millionaire self. And believe me: soon you'll look back and see how one day, with a single action, it all began.

Chapter 15

Your new self: the legacy of abundance you leave in the world

You've walked with me from the very first page. You've discovered the secrets of the millionaire mind, created your master plan, faced life's challenges, and taken concrete steps toward your wealth.

Now is the time to take an even bigger step: to understand that your abundance is not just for you, but for the world.

Money isn't just about full bank accounts or luxury cars. Real money is freedom, impact, and legacy.

Your new self

The new you that emerges after this journey:

He no longer fears money, because he knows it is his ally.

She no longer lets herself be dragged down by scarcity, because she lives in a vibration of abundance.

He no longer waits for opportunities, because he creates them.

He no longer thinks only of himself, because he understands that by serving others, wealth multiplies.

Your new self is a leader, creator, and wealth generator.

The legacy you leave behind

Ask yourself: what mark do I want to leave on this world?

Do I want to be remembered as someone who worked hard… or as someone who lived free and helped others to be free?

Do I want to leave behind debts, or do I want to leave behind opportunities, projects, and a path of abundance for those who come after me?

Real wealth doesn't end with you: it begins with you, but extends to your children, your friends, your community… and all of humanity.

Master plan: your pact with wealth

This is the moment to seal your commitment. Write in your notebook:

My purpose with money is…

The cause or people I will support with my abundance are…

My vision of a millionaire lifestyle includes…

Make this pact your guide. Read it every week. Adjust it as you grow. This pact will be your compass when life tries to lead you astray.

Final exercise: your money attraction map

Draw or write a map with the following elements:

My vision: What do I want to achieve with money?

My key actions: What steps will I take in the next 12 months?

My allies: What people, mentors, or communities will support me?

My impact: How will my wealth change the world?

This map is your GPS to abundance. Hang it where you can see it every day.

Your personal promise

To conclude this journey, write in your own hand:

“I promise to live in abundance, act with courage, and share my wealth to create a better world. I promise never to live in scarcity again, because I know that money is my ally and abundance is my natural right. Today, my new self is born: a wealth creator and a bearer of light.”

Sign it. Date it. And keep it as a sacred contract with yourself.

The grand finale

Dear reader: you are no longer the same person who started this book. You have crossed an invisible threshold. From now on, money seeks you out, abundance accompanies you, and life awaits you to take your place as the architect of your millionaire destiny.

Remember: wealth is a journey, not a destination. And you're already on that journey.

Welcome to the world of those who attract money with art, awareness, and purpose.

The world awaits your greatness.

EPILOGUE

The Journey Begins Now

You've reached the end of these pages, but let me tell you with absolute clarity: this is not the end, it's the beginning. The true journey to wealth isn't measured by the pages read, but by the actions taken, the beliefs transformed, and the life lived from a new frequency.

You've walked the fundamental path: you understood that money is energy, you unlocked the invisible laws of abundance, you reprogrammed your millionaire mindset, and you learned to turn vision into tangible action. You've made a sacred pact with yourself. That's no small feat. It's the foundation of a legacy.

Remember this in the days to come: life will test you. There will be voices of doubt, both internal and external. Moments when procrastination will try to steal your faith. In those moments, return to your Master Plan. Repeat your promise. Firmly maintain your vibration of abundance. The universe always, always rewards courageous perseverance.

The world doesn't need more people who just accumulate money. It needs more beings like you, who are awakening. Beings who understand that true wealth is the freedom to create, the ability to impact, and the wisdom to share. Your new self isn't a dreamer; it's an architect of realities. Where others see a world full of limitations, you see an infinite field of possibilities.

Your personal abundance is the first chapter of a much bigger story: the story of the impact you will leave on the world.

So go out. Create. Serve. Attract. Win. Give. Enjoy.

With every step you take, you will be confirming that the art of attracting money is not a hidden mystery, but a spiritual and practical science that you now master.

The world awaits your greatness. And now, at last, you are ready to deliver it.

With admiration and certainty of your success,

The Million Secret
